Sheriff's Office in 'desperate need' of 100 more deputies

Dire straits. The sheriff asked the city for $4.1 million, claiming his staffing shortage has reached a "critical point."

At a City Council budget hearing yesterday, Sheriff Jewell Williams said he doesn't have the manpower to staff new courts slated to open next June – or even to adequately fulfill his office's existing duties.

He's asking for $4.1 million in additional funding to hire 100 more deputies, along with several support staffers.

"If we have to deploy 40 people over to that building, it will not be enough to secure that building the way it should be," Williams said. "We can do it if we have to, but it'll be a risk. I just hope the victim of that risk is not a citizen doing their civic duty or someone bringing their grandkid to visit a father who has an issue in the court."

Williams pointed out that most violent court incidents have occurred at family and domestic courts, which in Philadelphia are largely staffed by private security firms. Williams said those personnel aren't held to the same training standards as sheriff's deputies.

"I want to say on the record if you do not hire additional deputies, you'll be opening up a courthouse next June with untrained professionals," he said.

Areas of concern

Many deputies' bullet-proof vests haven't been replaced in five years.

- They must commute to train at Penn State.
- There's not enough staff to crack down on cameras or cell phones in courtrooms.

Explosions were like 'gun shots,' says local runner

Personal experience. Boston Marathon runner Kay Kyungsun Yu, of Philadelphia, said she would race again.

Kay Kyungsun Yu stands at the start of the Boston Marathon.

Philadelphian Kay Kyungsun Yu was half a mile from the finish line at the Boston Marathon on Monday when she heard the explosions that killed three and injured nearly 200.

"The explosions sounded like gun shots," said Yu, who was running her eighth Boston Marathon. "The police quickly came and told us the race was over."

Yu, along with several others, was not able to enter her hotel room at the Marriott Courtyard until 7:30 p.m. because it was part of the crime scene. Her trip home yesterday was also delayed.

But the experience has not deterred Yu from running other races.

"I intend to run in the Broad Street Race in Philadelphia in three weeks," she said. "I would run another Boston Marathon."

Yu, who has done work with intergroup conflict at schools while with the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations, found her life's work clashing with her personal experience.

"Professionally, I was glad that Obama waited to declare the bombing incident an act of terrorism," she said. "Seeing it up close, there was no doubt it was an act of terrorism."

Gloria Steinem speaks

Keynote. The activist and author touts equality at Planned Parenthood event.

Gloria Steinem, writer and activist, spoke to a sold-out crowd last night at a Planned Parenthood Southeastern Pennsylvania fundraiser.

In an interview, the ever-youthful Steinem explained why we are still debating reproductive rights. "It is about a need to control," said Steinem. "America did not have a problem with birth control until the Europeans came over with their monotheistic religions."

She also gave her support for Facebook COO Sheryl Sandberg. "If a woman succeeds, she is hated. If a man succeeds, he is loved," she said.

She especially endorsed her idea of co-parenting. Steinem said, "Couples should not agree to have children unless the men agree to parent equally."

Dayle Steinberg, PPSP CEO, said politicians are not listening to the voter. "They spent one-third of last year debating abortion instead of jobs and the budget when the economy is doing so badly."

Boston: Who would do this?

A memorial to those killed and injured by the marathon bombings / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Mourners attend a vigil held on the Boston Common last night. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Just the start. The investigation into who is behind Monday's Boston Marathon bombings is in its beginning stages.

Investigators said two bombs that tore through the crowd at the Boston Marathon finish line Monday may have been fashioned out of shrapnel-filled pressure cookers that were transported in black nylon backpacks.

Boston doctors treating the wounded told reporters that several of the victims were maimed by what appeared to be pieces of plastic and metal. The fragments were removed during surgery and turned over to authorities.

Federal Bureau of Investigation Special Agent Richard DesLauriers, who is heading up the investigation, said the pressure cooker bombs may have also contained ball bearings and nails.

As of yesterday evening, no one had taken responsibility for the bombings, and investigators had made no arrests in connection with the attack, which killed three people and injured more than 170.

The explosions happened around 2:50 p.m. Monday near the finish line of the Boston Marathon, on Boylston Street.

Authorities said they had received more than 2,000 tips as of noon yesterday, many of which were reviewed by 5 p.m.

"The investigation in its infancy. We will thoroughly review each and every piece of evidence," DesLaurier said, also pleading with the public to provide more information.

The FBI is looking for people who might have seen or heard suspicious activity, including someone carrying a dark, heavy bag near the site of the blasts before the explosions.

DesLaurier asked people to inform investigators if they heard any noises similar to an explosion in the days before the attack, as they may indicate a practice blast, and also if anyone overheard discussions a possible attack on the Boston Marathon.

"The range of suspects and motives remains wide open. We're asking for tips from anyone who may target the event," he said.

Forensic experts are reconstructing the suspected explosive devices at an FBI lab in Virginia to determine its components.

More information is expected during a media briefing this afternoon, but in the meantime DesLaurier asked the public to "remain alert."

Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino joined officials at the briefing yesterday, commending civilians and emergency respondents for their assistance.

"We are Boston. We are one community and we will not let terror take us over," he said.

The victims

Three killed, two identified

A Dorchester child, a Medford woman and a Boston University student were killed in Monday's attack on Boston.

Of the three killed, only two were identified as of last night.

Martin Richard, 8, of Dorchester was the first to be identified. His death was mourned at a neighborhood restaurant Monday night.

Martin Richard, 8

Krystle Campbell, 29

His father, Bill Richard, released a statement Tuesday morning: "My dear son Martin has died from injuries sustained in the attack on Boston... I ask that you continue to pray for my family as we remember Martin."

The boy's mother and sister are recovering from serious injuries, Richard said.

Krystle Campbell, 29, of Medford, was identified as the second person killed by the explosions. Campbell's mother, Patty, tearfully remembered her daughter on the porch of their Park Street home last night.

"We are heartbroken at the death of our daughter," she said. "She was a wonderful person. Everyone that knew her loved her. She had a heart of gold. She was always smiling."

Following Monday's blasts, Campbell reportedly received news that Krystle had been injured but was all right.

She was later notified that Krystle's identity had been mixed up with her friend's.

Boston University last night confirmed that the third person killed in the bombings was a BU graduate student but did not release the name of the student, pending permission from the family.

Devices. Bombs made from pressure cookers

FBI officials said yesterday the bombs that killed three and wounded 176 may have been fashioned out of pressure cookers packed with shards of metal, nails, ball bearings and other shrapnel-type material.

Following the announcement, media reports started showing up shedding light on pressure cooker bombs, which are made from a common kitchen appliance and seem to be a favorite within in terrorist circles.

In 2004, the Department of Homeland Security issued an alert to federal and state security officials, calling the conversion of pressure cookers into IEDs "a technique commonly taught in Afghan terrorist training camps."

A pressure cooker is an airtight utensil for quick cooking or preserving foods by means of high-temperature steam under pressure, like a rice cooker. According DHS, these bombs are typically made by placing TNT or other explosives in a pressure cooker and attaching a blasting cap at the top of the pressure cooker. Instructions to make bombs out of pressure cookers were published two years ago in Inspire, an online magazine tied to al-Qaeda and the late U.S.-born cleric Anwar al-Awlaki, USA Today reported yesterday.

Investigators said yesterday they were analyzing the explosive devices at an FBI lab in Virginia, but did not say what explosive material set off the bomb.

Task force: Torture at Gitmo 'indisputable'

Prison. Obama banned abusive interrogation techniques when he took office in 2009.

An independent task force issued a damning review of Bush-era interrogation practices on Tuesday, saying the highest U.S. officials bore ultimate responsibility for the "indisputable" use of torture, and it urged President Barack Obama to close the Guantanamo detention camp by the end of 2014.

In one of the most comprehensive studies of U.S. treatment of terrorism suspects, the panel concluded that never before had there been "the kind of considered and detailed discussions that occurred after 9/11 directly involving a president and his top advisers on the wisdom, propriety and legality of inflicting pain and torment on some detainees in our custody."

"It is indisputable that the United States engaged in the practice of torture," the 11-member task force, assembled by the nonpartisan Constitution Project think tank, said in their 577-page report.

The scathing critique of methods used under the Republican administration of former President George W. Bush also sharpened the focus on the plight of inmates at Guantanamo, which Bush opened and his Democratic successor has failed to close.

Obama banned abusive interrogation techniques when he took office, but the widely condemned military prison has remained an object of condemnation by human rights advocates. REUTERS

Will Smith and the aliens

In anticipation of Metro's special guests, Will and Jaden Smith, who will appear in our exclusive Earth Day issue on April 22, we'll have a story every day until then. Today we offer a look at Will Smith's out-of-this-wold relationship with aliens.

1 'Independence Day'
Our hero punches an alien in the face: "Welcome to Earth." A star is born.

2 'Men in Black'
He hangs out with aliens, including Frank the Pug — when not killing them. He will do this two more times, in the sequels.

3 'The Wild Wild West'
Does a mechanical spider count as an alien?

4 'I, Robot'
Aliens here? No! They are robots.

5 'I Am Legend'
The mutants trying to kill Will are more dangerous than aliens. They are us.

6 'Seven Pounds'
No aliens, unless you count the jellyfish.

7 'After Earth'
Aliens! Will and son Jaden return to an Earth that's been destroyed, probably because of the baddies. Someone call Tommy Lee. MWN

Senate. Backers of expanded gun background checks scramble for votes

A bipartisan proposal to expand background checks for gun buyers appeared to be short of the 60 votes needed to clear the Senate, as supporters scrambled to save the centerpiece of President Barack Obama's effort to reduce gun violence.

Debate on the plan forged by Democrat Joe Manchin of West Virginia and Republican Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania continued in the Senate for a second day.

The plan needs 60 votes to overcome procedural hurdles erected by Republican opponents in the 100-seat Senate, where Democrats control 55 seats. REUTERS

Venezuela accuses opposition of plotting coup

Venezuelan President-elect Nicolas Maduro accused the opposition of planning a coup against him after seven government supporters were killed in clashes over his disputed election victory.

Opposition leader Henrique Capriles has demanded a full recount of votes from Sunday's election after official results showed a narrow victory for Maduro, who is late socialist President Hugo Chavez's hand-picked successor. REUTERS

Pakistan bears brunt of Iranian quake, 35 killed

Aid. Pakistan's army said it had deployed troops and helicopters to ferry supplies and medical teams to Mashkeel.

A powerful earthquake struck a border area of southeast Iran yesterday, killing at least 35 people in neighboring Pakistan, destroying hundreds of houses and shaking buildings as far away as India and Gulf Arab states.

Communications with the sparsely populated desert and mountain region were largely cut off, making it difficult to assess Iranian casualties. But an Iranian provincial governor later said there were no reports of deaths there so far.

"Our staff were in a meeting and we felt the ground shake," Saleh Mangi, program unit manager for Plan International in the Pakistani town of Thatta, was quoted as saying by the British office of the children's charity.

"It was horrible; we felt the movement in the chairs and even the cupboards were shaking. This is the strongest quake I have felt since the 1980s."

Pakistani officials said at least 30 people were killed and 150 injured in the town of Mashkeel in the southwestern Pakistani province of Baluchistan, which borders Iran.

Mohammed Ashraf, head of a health center in Mashkeel, said several hundred houses in the town had caved in.

Three women and two children were also killed when their mud house collapsed in the Baluchistan district of Panjgur. REUTERS

Meet BCoop's mom-cum-roommate

Bradley Cooper, 2012's World's Sexiest Man, has a not-so-sexy roommate: his mom. In the new issue of Details, he admits he's been living with his mother since his father died in 2011.

"It's probably not easy for her to be living with her son," he admits. "It's life. And right now, two years after my father's death, this is where we are. ... But don't get me wrong. It's not without complications. It's not like I live in a compound and she's in the guesthouse. No. She's in the next room."

I used to share an apartment with a guy who was in the next room over and I heard everything — and my roommate wasn't nearly as attractive as Bradley Cooper. Let's hope Mama Cooper is a little hard of hearing.

Osbourne admits to drugs, not to divorce

Ozzy Osbourne took to Facebook to clear the air about rumors that he and his wife, Sharon, are on the outs — and to make a completely different confession. "For the last year and a half I have been drinking and taking drugs," Ozzy wrote. "I was in a very dark place and was an a—hole to the people I love most: my family. However, I am happy to say that I am now 44 days sober. Just to set the record straight, Sharon and I are not divorcing. I'm just trying to be a better person."

Radar Online reported over the weekend that the long-married pair are living separately, with Ozzy in a rented Beverly Hills mansion and Sharon at the Beverly Hills Hotel. "They are living at different addresses and not spending any time together," a source recently told the Sun. Sharon is believed to be staying at the famous hotel while she decorates a new home — but not the one where Ozzy is staying.

Drake talks about Brown's insecurities

Drake may not be trying too hard to ease his ongoing feud with Chris Brown, but he does at least want everyone else to stop harping on it. "Don't ask me s— about that man when I come up there, and leave that man alone. Stop preying on his insecurities," the Canadian rapper said, getting testy during an interview with online radio show Keep it Thoro late last week. "His insecurities are the fact that I make better music than him, that I'm more popping than him and that at one point in life the woman that he loves fell into my lap."

Amanda Seyfried misses her boobs

Not that there's anything wrong with them now, but "Les Miserables" star Amanda Seyfried says her breasts used to be bigger — and she laments not appreciating her ample bosom more when she was younger. "I saw a picture of them a couple of days ago from when I was 19, and my boobs were way bigger. They were a D, and now they're a small C because I lost weight," she tells Allure magazine. "There was something so beautiful about the size of them. When I look back, I'm like, 'Why did I always give myself such a hard time?' Nobody gave me s— about it except me." But Seyfried admits that even at their current size, her breasts can be a problem. "They do get in the way a lot," she says. "Like, I wear a really small, tight sports bra when I go running. ... Because they want to smack my chin."

Meet Pamela Anderson's new face

I keep looking at this new photo of Pamela Anderson and don't know what to think. On one hand, she looks like she's gotten a ton of work done (doesn't her new face look a lot like it's trying to channel Jessica Lange's?). But on the other, it could be so much worse. She looks ... refreshed? In any case, here is Anderson and her undecided-on face on Monday at the International Beauty Show at Jacob Javits Center in New York City. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Finding the Joy in solitude

Cabin fever. The Joy Formidable turned a canceled gig up north into a majestic album.

The Joy Formidable are, from left, is Ritzy Bryan, Rhydian Dafydd and Matt Thomas. / CONTRIBUTED

Normally, a canceled gig is a big setback for a touring band. For the Joy Formidable, however, one particular ditched show turned into creative gold. Dial back to Thanksgiving 2011: The British rock band's U.S. tour for their debut, "The Big Roar," was headed to Portland, Maine. Then the venue abruptly closed, canceling what was the last show before a week off. What to do? Head home early for a rest, or travel deeper into Maine? They chose the latter.

"We'd been writing on the road," says singer/guitarist Ritzy Bryan. "It's difficult to track on buses and in hotel rooms. There's only a certain amount of charm that having background noise brings to a record. … We were very excited by what we were writing and we needed time to reflect on it."

So the trio chose a different type of lodging.

"We rented a cabin in the woods for a week," says Bryan. "The cabin had such a great energy we decided to go back there in January to finish the record, to make sense of it all."

Their stay didn't turn into a horror movie. Instead, with no distractions — no Wi-Fi, no phone – Bryan and her bandmates found the perfect spot to craft their sophomore album, "Wolf's Law."

Unusually, the title song is a hidden track — but in many ways, it's the album's most important. It was written in London, one of the first new songs after their debut, and it's the link between the nascent band and what is now a seasoned trio.

"'Wolf's Law' was a big part of making this record, almost too big," says Bryan. "We needed to include it, but we always felt that it belonged on its own because it was conceived almost as an art piece. It needs a space on its own."

Serenity now!

The Maine thing

Bryan recalls those three weeks in the dead of winter in Maine and laughs: "To the locals, it was quite a mild winter, which we were completely bewildered by. We were scooping up 9 feet of snow in the backyard. But it was perfect. There's an extra level of serenity that befell the cabin from having that much snow."

Prof. Poopypants causes offense among readers

Books. 'Captain Underpants' tops the list of library complaints

Subversive toilet humor proved more offensive to Americans than bondage and eroticism last year, according to a list of most challenged books in U.S. libraries that saw complaints about "Captain Underpants" outweigh those for "Fifty Shades of Grey."

The American Library Association said Dav Pilkey's "Captain Underpants" series for children, which features characters like Professor Poopypants and Wedgie Woman, topped its 2012 list of books that Americans asked to be removed from libraries because of content that they considered inappropriate.

The "Captain Underpants" series of 10 books has appeared on the annual list three times since 2002, but has never previously reached the No. 1 spot, the ALA said on Monday.

"Fifty Shades of Grey," the best-selling sadomasochistic tale of college students and a businessman by British author E.L. James, debuted on the list in fourth place after the erotic trilogy sold 70 million copies around the world in the past two years.

The ALA said its office for intellectual freedom received a total of 464 reports in 2012 on attempts to remove books from public and school libraries or school curricula. That was an increase from the 326 attempts recorded in 2011.

The ALA defines such "challenges" as formal written complaints to a library or school requesting that a book or other material be restricted or removed.

Other books making the list included "And Tango Makes Three," a children's tale about two male penguins who adopt an egg together, and Khaled Hosseini's Afghanistan-based best-seller "The Kite Runner."

Hypertension? Sleep Apnea? Trouble Losing Weight?

Bariatric surgery may be the answer.

My job involves pep rallies. I announce college games. But at 348 pounds, I didn't have much pep – just high blood pressure, headaches and sleepless nights. Luckily, my wife introduced me to Jefferson, where I had my bariatric surgery. Today, my hypertension and sleep apnea are behind me, but the Bariatric and Metabolic Surgery team still has my back. At my current 188 pounds, it's way easier to get in the team spirit. And, with all my friends at Jefferson, I've got a whole other team to cheer for.

Dancing awkwardly with Ira Glass

Mixed media. The NPR host teams up with a dance troupe for this Annenberg premiere.

"Honestly," says Ira Glass, "the most important thing to say is we know that this is ridiculous." The host of public radio's "This American Life" has teamed with choreographer Monica Bill Barnes to create "One Radio Host Two Dancers," a piece that attempts to combine radio stories and dance. "We know these things don't go together. It shouldn't work at all, and yet it weirdly works."

The two met when Barnes was a judge for a "Dancing With the Stars" parody in New York in which Glass was one of the celebrity dancers. Barnes' company was later invited to perform on a filmed episode of "This American Life" that was screened in movie theaters last May. "People loved the dancers," Glass recalls, "and I said to Monica, 'It seems like a lot more people would like you than know you exist.'"

Offering to bring the public-radio audience to her, Glass introduced Barnes during a pair of sold-out New York performances, then began devising plans for the evening-length collaboration,

Dance fanatic

Despite the fact that he's reluctantly learned a few steps for these performances, Ira Glass admits to not being much of a dance fanatic. "I'm a normal American," he says. "I almost never go to see dance. I've probably seen more than most people because I see like two a year, and that's only because I've met a bunch of dancers."

"Most Americans only go to see dance when their own child is in it. So I feel like I'm squarely in the mainstream of America, where you go to a dance performance when you know one of the performers," he adds. "It just happens to be that the ones I know are adults and not little kids."

which they'll premiere this weekend at the Annenberg Center.

"From the first time I saw Monica perform, I was struck at how the sensibility of her company felt exactly like the sensibility of the radio show," Glass says. "There are these weird, awkward, very real-feeling moments."

"I feel like we're both really interested in humanizing common experiences," Barnes says. "I'm seldom drawn to creating dances that ask the audience to be in great admiration of us. Usually they're seeing us stumble or attempt something just beyond our reach, and Ira gives voice to some of the things that I'm using as metaphors."

The main challenge, Barnes says, has been finding a way to make the pairing of stories and dance complement one another. "We're walking an interesting line between literal and abstract. We want to avoid handing the audience too much information, and create something like Ira does with his show, where he offers you intriguing pieces but doesn't always sew it all together. The listener has a role in making the meaning."

Scott Greer looks very happy to star in "North of the Boulevard."

Heading 'North of the Boulevard'

Theater. How grease, metal and profanity inspired Bruce Graham's new show.

If you go

'North of the Boulevard'
April 18–May 19
Theatre Exile's Studio X

For years, Bruce Graham wanted to write a play based on his cousin's car repair shop. But he had to get hoppin' mad first, before he found a story amidst the grease, metal and profanity.

"I would hang around the garage, meet the guys from the neighborhood. We would just sit there and laugh our asses off. The whole time I'm thinking, 'Oh my God, what great characters.' Once I figured out what I wanted to use the set for, the play just wrote itself," says Graham. "Anger seems to inspire my plays, especially the funny ones. And, to me, the average lower middle class and middle class people in this country are getting royally screwed. When I was growing up [in Philly] your dad worked at Boeing, GE, Westinghouse, or the Navy Yard. ... That's just not here anymore, and people are peeved by that."

"North of the Boulevard" begins previews this week at Theatre Exile's Studio X in South Philly. Directed by Matt Pfeiffer, the play features longtime Philly actor Scott Greer as a mechanic presented with a get-just-enough-richer-quick scheme.

"It's 'Can I get north of the [Roosevelt] Boulevard?' It's not like you're trying to get to nirvana or something," says Graham. "It's just like, 'I want to get three miles away from here to a better school district for my kids, which is a pretty realistic goal in life, I think."

An appropriate venue

Originally scheduled to debut in a Center City venue, "Boulevard" was moved to due to a scheduling conflict. As luck would have it, Theatre Exile's South Philly rehearsal space is a converted auto repair garage. Award-winning set designer Matt Saunders was brought in to reconvert the space into a garage again and expand the seating capacity of the venue.

Locally grown

Bruce Graham is one of the first nationally recognized playwrights to make his home in Philadelphia. He won the 2011 Jeff Award (Chicago's version of the Tony) for "The Outgoing Tide," which starred John Mahoney as a retired man struggling with dementia.

Apple's Game Center has quietly moved from being that icon on your iPhone you occasionally shrug at to being a cross-platform gaming powerhouse. Since the release of OS X Mountain Lion, and the Mac App Store, titles have begun flooding in that let you play on your Mac against people on their iPhones and iPad (and vice versa). Here are a couple of standout games that let you do just that.

"Sky Gamblers" / CONTRIBUTED

'Sky Gamblers: Air Supremacy'

System. Mac/iPad/iPhone
Company. Nambo Bandai
Cost. $2.99 plus in-game purchases
Grade. ●●●●○

The flying sim is about as old as gaming itself. Most of us will never, ever get behind the wheel of an airplane, so playing a video game recreation just feels right. To that end, the "Sky Gamblers" series is the best airborne action available for iOS. This game offers sharp graphics, a great single-player campaign and, of course, plenty of cross-platform multiplayer tomfoolery. The only downside? Too many in-game purchases.

The cool thing about playing this on a Mac is you can plug in a joystick, challenge some friends who are playing via touch screen and wipe the sky with them. Here's to taking advantage of technology.

'Real Racing 2'

System. Mac/iPad/iPhone
Company. EA
Cost. $12.99 Mac/$6.99 iPad/$4.99 iPhone
Grade. ●●●●●

"Real Racing" was one of the first iOS games to show off true console quality graphics. The sequel, first released for iPhone and iPad two years ago, has finally come home to roost on Macs. Guess what? It's even better than the original.

What makes "Real Racing 2" so great? The graphics are fantastic, looking as good or better than any comparable racer for home consoles. The gameplay is smooth and offers a handful of neat control schemes, even allowing you to steer using your iPad or iPhone.

Just how much should you eat?

Diet. The answers might surprise you. A nutritionist weighs in on basics of portion control.

When it comes to maintaining a healthy weight, how much we eat is as important as what is on the plate. Unless you carry around a scale or measuring cup, portion size can get out of control.

"The eye easily gets tricked. Most people need a serving size reality check," says Nicolette M. Pace, R.D., the founder of NutriSource Inc., which specializes in nutrition-based disease prevention and treatment.

We asked Pace for some easy visual identifiers for common foods that we often oversize.

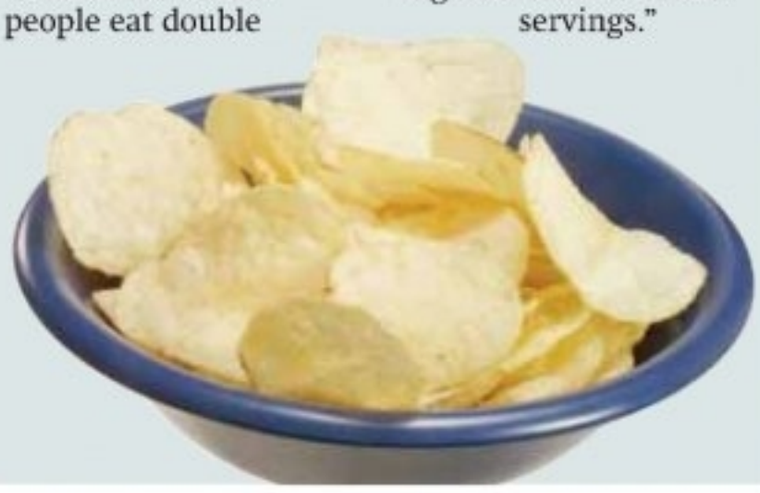
LINDA CLARKE
letters@metro.us

Pasta

Portion size: ½ cup
"With pasta it depends on type, but [aim for] about the size of a large computer mouse."

Chips

Portion size: 15 chips
"Count them. Most people eat double or triple an individual serving size. Look at the label. Even small bags have two to three servings."



Bread

Portion size: 3 ounces
"It depends on density, but for heavy bread like ciabatta, that's about the size of a smartphone, and maybe a TV remote for a baguette."

Don't go crazy

Can we eat as big a portion of low-calorie vegetables as we want?

"Yes and no," says Pace. "Calorie-wise, it's probably fine, though some vegetables like peas have higher carb values. The real danger lies in stomach capacity.

The stomach holds about a quart, but you can stretch it to a gallon. If you continually stretch it, then it begins to need larger portions to feel satisfied."

Chicken

Portion size: 3 ounces
"That is the recommended amount and that looks like a deck of cards. For a larger person to feel satisfied, the amount might be more like two decks."

Rice

Portion size: ⅓ cup
"Two-thirds is about the size of a tennis ball, so, half a tennis ball."

French fries

Portion size: 10 fries
"It's horrible — it's like nothing. But you're dehydrating the potato and replacing the water with fat."

Ice cream

Portion size: One cup
"The half pint looks like an individual serving, but it's really two. One serving is about the size of a baseball."

Skin-cancer survivors balk at sun safety

Location of study: U.S.
Study subjects: 171 skin-cancer survivors
Results: A Yale study found that despite undergoing treatment for skin cancer, some melanoma survivors still use tanning beds and stay in the sun without sunscreen.
Significance: Survivors of melanoma, the deadliest form of skin cancer, have nine times the risk of a reoccurrence of skin cancer than those who have not suffered.

Hope they're wearing their sunscreen! / GETTY IMAGES

Asthma cases drop after smoking ban

Location of study: England
Study subjects: Adults 16 and over
Results: In each of the first three years following England's ban on smoking in public places, emergency admissions for adults with asthma attacks fell by almost 5 percent, a study posted in the journal Thorax says.
Significance: England is thought to be among the top countries for asthma in the world. Researchers accounted for seasonal temperatures, variations in population size and long-term trends in reaching their conclusions, but also attributed them to a reduction in secondhand smoke. Public smoking was banned in England in July 2007.

Heart rate may signal problems

Location of study: Cophenhagen, Denmark
Study subjects: Men
Results: Researchers at Copenhagen University Hospital have linked a high pulse (resting heart rate) with earlier mortality, even in healthy, physically fit people. Those with high resting heart rates worked out less, had higher blood pressure, weighed more and had higher levels of circulating blood fats.
Significance: A normal pulse is considered to be between 60 and 100 beats per minute. METRO

COULD YOU HAVE A DRINKING PROBLEM?

I like to have a few drinks with dinner, but I drink almost every night. How do I know if I have a drinking problem?

The Doctor Will See You Now

DR. MARK MELROSE
URGENTCAREMANHATTAN.COM
Mark Melrose, DO, is a board-certified emergency physician at Urgent Care Manhattan. E-mail him your questions at askdrmark@metro.us.

It is perfectly reasonable to enjoy a beer with a burger or a glass of wine to wind down after a long day; it's even OK to get drunk on daiquiris during your Caribbean vacation. There is even documented medical research that suggests a drink or two daily may have certain healthy benefits in modifying risks for cancer or cardiovascular disease. On the other hand, public health research estimates that up to 30 percent of all Americans have abused alcohol at some point. So how do you draw the line between healthy and "problem" drinking?

Alcoholism and alcohol abuse are somewhat different health concerns associated with drinking. Both result from alcohol use interfering with health, family, occupation, relationships and financial or legal well-being.

Alcoholism results in physical addiction from excess alcohol intake and symptoms that might include tolerance to excess drinking, or withdrawal from cessation of alcohol use (tremors, nausea, vomiting, hallucinations, etc.).

Alcohol abuse causes illness or physical harm due to injury, or interferes with the responsibilities and activities of daily living — all without the signs of physical addiction. If you have fallen down drunk and hit your head, called in sick to work vomiting and dehydrated from a hangover or forgot to pick up your kids after school following a two-martini lunch date, then you have abused alcohol to some extent.

The bottom line is that if boozing messes up your relationships, empties your wallet, gets in the way of adult responsibilities or has your local law enforcement officer asking you to puff on a Breathalyzer, you drink too much. The amount of alcohol is not the determining factor. "I only had one drink," is not a valid excuse if your personality or judgment is affected in a way that makes you belligerent or unreliable. If you've ever wondered if you drink too much, or a loved one or colleague has suggested as much, you likely have an alcohol-related problem that should be addressed.

There are a number of resources available if you need help. A good place to start is with your primary care physician or a mental health professional who may assess your individual circumstances and make recommendations for moderating alcohol intake or abstaining from alcohol altogether. Support from family and friends is also important, and organizations such a Al-Anon or Alcoholics Anonymous may be an option if you have an ongoing identified alcohol addiction.

Just how many is one too many? The answer differs from person to person. / GETTY IMAGES

Tips on shopping vintage

Shopping. Here's expert advice from the organizer of the Manhattan Vintage Clothing Show.

Both Ornstein and Abtahie say the key to finding great vintage is to try on a variety of items. / MANHATTAN VINTAGE SHOW

There's something about summer months that make us want to comb through vintage stalls in outdoor markets and road-trip to estate sales. But racks filled with varying eras, styles and colors can be a confusing mess. We asked David Ornstein, vintage expert and organizer of the Manhattan Vintage Show — taking place this Friday and Saturday in NYC — along with Ashley Abtahie, from Amarcord Vintage Fashion, for their tips on scoring one-of-a-kind treasures.

Try things on: "The first thing when you are fresh to the vintage shopping scene is to be open to trying on several silhouettes and eras until you find the styles that best suit your figure and personal aesthetic," says Abtahie. Ornstein adds, "In the 1940s, things were very tailored and fit certain bodies better. In the 1930s, clothing was cut on the bias, and the '50s are the beginning of very practical clothing. You're getting into worldwide manufacturing, and it's probably the heyday of the best quality of ready-to-wear."

Start at the source: "Estate sales are great places to look," says Ornstein. "Most vintage clothing dealers buy their clothing at the source — that means out of the house from the people that originally owned them. There are sites such as www.estatesales.net that tell people where those sales are."

But if you're thinking of hitting up estate sales, be prepared to skip brunch. "With vintage, everything is one-of-a kind, so if you're serious, get online early," says Ornstein. He also recommends www.vintagefashionguild.com

Examine pieces: "Vintage clothing is made from better materials than today. We're looking at silks, wool and cotton," says Ornstein. "Look for construction clues like hand sewing, metal zippers, covered buttons and silk linings — those are all good indicators of finer-quality vintage." Abtahie says examining pieces will also help you identify a fake. "Nowadays fakes are often accompanied with authenticity cards, so we can't rely on that," she says. "I would also suggest asking questions to the seller about where the product was sourced to get a better idea."

Find yourself: "When people go to buy clothing — whether it's Bloomingdale's or Century 21 — what's being sold is a pretty narrow range of things," explains Ornstein. "All the millions of people who are trying to find their own tastes are having to chose from a very finite range of items. When you come to a vintage store, you're exposed to the entire range of fashion styles, and that way people can find out who they are and what they like." It's also a great way to get on-trend items for less. "If you look at the runway shows this past season, you see geometrics and broad stripes, and all these things have been in vintage for the past 100 years," he says.

Crafting a whole new look

Decor. Shop these craft fairs for one-of-a-kind home finds.

WALL HOOK FROM VINTAGE BEE REDUX

You could browse for home goods in the endless aisles of box stores, or you could shop outdoors and discover something that's truly one-of-a-kind. This weekend, the gift boutique VIX Emporium is hosting the Go West! Craft Fest. The fest, which has been happening three times a year since 2011, gained so much momentum that it recently moved from humble Cedar Park to the sprawling hills of the Woodlands. That means even more handmade home goodies. Just remember to pace yourself, as there are other fairs on the horizon.

Go West! Craft Fest

Find something for every corner of the house at Go West!. "Some of my favorite things available are aeriums, which are living 'air plant' arrangements in glass orbs by Stitch Prism," says VIX Emporium owner Emily Dorn. "There are also numerous printmakers whose work can brighten up a blank wall, like Suzanne Francis, Exit343, Laura Murdoch, Fennec, Corina Dross, Bob Dix and Ashley Cubbler," Dorn adds. Don't miss the gorgeous floral wall hooks from Vintage Bee Redux.

Pennsylvania Guild Fine Craft Fair

The Fine Craft Fair is an art collector's dream. Expect very creative, very expensive home decor at this Rittenhouse pop-up. If you're looking for elegant and sophisticated, gravitate toward the ceramic vases, original paintings and mixed-media wall hangings.

May 10–12, Rittenhouse Square, 19th and Walnut Sts., www.pacrafts.org

Art Star Craft Bazaar

This is one of the largest, most celebrated craft fairs in the city, so make sure you save some dough to spend here. The application process and fee for crafters is fierce and steep enough to weed out mediocrity. Take, for example, the reclaimed and repurposed woodwork of Farmhaus: Ben McBrien brings old wood to life with dramatic silhouettes

Bar Heritage Collection jars

From Pinterest to backyard weddings, Mason jars pretty much rule the cute scene. Jarden Home Brands, makers of Ball canning jars, are even reporting a 31 percent increase in jar sales — most of which have nothing to do with canning jam. To add more fuel to your precious projects, the company just released a limited-edition line, the Ball Heritage collection, of pint-size jars in their original vintage blue color. Why the reissue, you ask? It's to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the "Perfect Mason." So pour some bubbly and raise a jar to, well, the most perfect Mason jar. $12.99 for a pack of six, www.freshpreservingstore.com

A poem for a better world

Today I pray for humanity.

I pray for the day when men, women and children can just live.

Live a life without terror and fear.

To live a life with respect, love and compassion.

Today I pray for life.

I pray for a life where a family is safe, and we can watch our children grow.

To grow up in a world where we can walk the streets and trust our neighbors.

Today I pray for love.

I pray for every moment that we have with our families and friends

I pray for strangers fighting a bigger battle than us.

Today I pray for our country, and the world we live in, to change.

Fashion doesn't have to be pricey

Re: "Pieces every man should own" (Metro, April 16) In the grand scheme of things, considering the bombings in Boston yesterday and other issues that affect the world on a deeper level, this isn't a big deal.

But I couldn't help but be frustrated at the brand names and prices in your small segment on men's fashion.

Not all of us have $225 to spend on a pair of red khakis. Next time, consider your more financially humble readers.

BOSTON, PAPELBON PLAYING GAME OF 'WHAT IF' AND 'WHY'

Opinion

MATT BURKE

MATTHEW.BURKE@METRO.US

It's nearly impossible to cover marathons or any type of road race as a sports writer. There are thousands upon thousands of men and women barreling in, one after the other after the other after the other across the finish line.

Trying to find that certain runner who has a local tie, that certain someone who would make for a great local story out of a sea of humanity or trying to fight off a big wig, contractually tied TV reporter for an interview with the actual winners of the race for just one, out-of-breath and usually incoherent quote is typically a venture doomed for failure.

That was my reasoning for staying away from the Boston Marathon finish line Monday. Today, I'm thanking God that I'm so damn cynical (and/or lazy).

When a tragedy occurs like the one that hit Boston Monday, a million "what-ifs" and "whys" race through your head. One of the whys that I struggled with was, "Why does sports even matter anymore?"

Yes, we will read and hear a million stories over the next few weeks about how sports is a "nice release" for everyone in Boston. That's true.

At its best, sports truly is the greatest form of escapism. If you've never seen HBO's "Nine Innings from Ground Zero," a documentary about how baseball lifted the city of New York after the 9/11 attacks, do yourself a favor and cue it up on Netflix. It will convince you that the cliche is so.

Nonetheless, all these Boston sporting events coming up in the next few weeks will feel entirely different. You'll wonder if it's really that important to catch Game 3 of the Celtics-Knicks first round series next week live and in person at TD Garden when you could just watch it on TV at your home instead … away from a place where another tragedy could hit.

My cynical radar made quite a bit of noise again early in the evening on Monday when I read the headline, "Former Red Sox closer Papelbon's thoughts are with Boston."

Why would this guy, who bolted the Red Sox after their tumultuous September of 2011, care about us? He's in Philly now. He willingly left Boston. In Boston, he's considered a fraud.

But then I read that as Papelbon and Phillies teammate Cliff Lee were watching coverage of the Marathon bombings on a TV in the team clubhouse, Papelbon was immediately spooked by the fact that he used to live "right above" where the second bomb went off.

Sure, Papelbon is a multi-millionaire. And yeah, he plays a child's game as his occupation. But Monday, he was as human as it gets. He was frightened. He was playing that horrible game of "what-ifs" and "whys," just like you and me.

Boston tragedy

Bruins likely to play

As of yesterday, the Boston Bruins planned to host tonight's game against the Sabres at TD Garden in Boston (7:30 p.m., NBCSN). It would be the first professional sporting event in the city since Monday afternoon's bombings at the Boston Marathon finish line.

Kelly: Oregon sanctions not a factor in exit

New Eagles head coach Chip Kelly said the violations being reported at Oregon played no role in his decision to leave the school.

Reports yesterday indicated there was at least one major violation by the school during his tenure, uncovered in the NCAA's long-running probe into Willie Lyles, who runs a recruiting service and was paid $25,000 by Oregon.

"No, that had absolutely no impact on my decision to leave," Kelly told reporters at Eagles minicamp yesterday.

The NCAA probe into Oregon is still ongoing and the NCAA has not released any findings. METRO

NBA. The 76ers look to put the 2013 season behind them and move on to rebuilding.

Philadelphia will bring to conclusion a season in which nothing ever seemed to go right against the Pacers tonight. It will also likely be Doug Collins's final game as head coach of the Sixers.

The Pacers have clinched the No. 3 seed in the Eastern Conference, so it's unlikely the team which will open the playoffs will be the same team playing tonight. METRO

76ers. Collins may stick around after all in consulting role

It appears the Sixers aren't ready for a full-fledged divorce from Doug Collins.

ESPN's Marc Stein reported yesterday that Collins will have a "new relationship with the 76ers" going forward and the role will likely be that of a "special consultant." Philly is 33-48 this season under Collins, and it was reported by multiple outlets earlier this week that he would be stepping down as head coach.

Collins is under contract as head coach of the team through next season and is owed $4.5 million.

Julius Erving, who currently serves as a "strategic adviser" in the organization, spoke out about the Sixers' direction or lack thereof. His comments revolved around Andrew Bynum and his impending free agency.

"We have not benefited one degree. I guess he has," Dr. J. told phillyBurbs.com. "If the Bynum situation is one of total uncertainty for another year, I don't think the organization should stand for that or the fans should stand for that." METRO

How did the Sixers become a franchise with little hope and a disillusioned fan base that's annually wallowing in mediocrity? In the NBA, a few wrong turns can leave you lost for a decade. Here are the three mind-numbing decisions that have crippled the organization.

ADAM LEVITAN
adam.levitan@metro.us

3 Sixers failures

Sign forward Elton Brand to five-year, $79.7 million contract

The July 2008 signing of Brand was widely lauded as a coup for the Sixers because they "stole" him away from the Clippers at the last minute.

But in reality, it was the first domino that allowed Los Angeles to ascend to their current standing. Giving $80 million to a 29-year-old player who was one year removed from an Achilles tendon tear is just inexcusable.

Brand was a shell of himself right from jump street for the Sixers, showing completely sapped athletic ability. He averaged a pitiful 13.2 points per game over four seasons in Philly and was paid to leave prior to the 2012-13 campaign via the amnesty clause. How did the medical staff sign off on damaged goods?

Draft guard Evan Turner No. 2 overall

When it comes to the draft, hindsight is always 20/20. But the Sixers already had two core wings who couldn't shoot in Andre Iguodala and Thaddeus Young.

They should have gone with a big, like Greg Monroe.

Trade guard Andre Iguodala for injured center Andrew Bynum

Credit the Sixers for swinging for the fences. But when it comes to one of the biggest trades in franchise history, there has to be a winner and loser. And the Sixers clearly lost.

Not only has Bynum not played a single minute for Philadelphia, but center Nikola Vucevic and guard Maurice Harkless (now both with the Magic) have the look of future stars.

Now, Bynum is a free agent and the chances of the Sixers bringing him back for the money he wants — and reportedly for the long term — is beyond unlikely.

The Sixers are left with the most cap room they've had since the Brand signing, but it's still not as much as teams like the Hawks, Cavaliers and Pistons.
